If you want to secure your files and secure them good, there's nothing better than having a sandbox. This is the name for a protected area on your computer where your child or significant other can play without too many risks to their personal information. Free Sandbox is such a tool. Its name sounds a bit odd, but the application really is just that – a sandbox full of toys for your kid or significant other to play with, with parental controls enabled. Free Sandbox makes it simple to create your sandbox, it comes with everything you need to create a sandbox from. The main window displays the information like the size, number of files, who can use it and so on. It's really a lot like the old Security Onion and it comes with some familiar features like allowing only certain applications to access the sandbox. It makes it easy to add or remove applications, and you can keep the sandbox locked down even when there's no current activity on the computer. The interface is intuitive and minimalistic, but you can change the position and size of the sandbox window. As a parent of small children, we at Team-X have checked the application out and it seems to be a decent choice for a computer security tool for kids. In their teens, it can still be useful as they may start to play with more personal information. The application is still in beta, but it's pretty stable and already works as intended. You can download it for free from the developer's website and it works on Windows XP, Vista, Windows 7 and later. Free Sandbox Description: There are many programs available on the market that can help you protect your computer and collect user activity. For example, the Snort client provides information on logon events and user actions, and Spy-X is a user activity collector that helps you protect your computer from virus attacks. Listing these important tools is not the aim of this blog post, but there's one Windows security tool that's been released that's deserved the spotlight. It's called PC-Guerrilla and it's mainly a sandbox. Sandboxes are a way to keep your private data secure on your computer, because they're not connected to the internet and other computers. However, you usually have to use some third-party software that's designed to run in a sandbox. PC-Guerrilla is a sandbox for Windows that has an intuitive graphical user interface.
