Beyond Photoshop The Creative Suite is not Photoshop alone. Several other programs, such as Adobe Acrobat or Adobe Reader, can be used for editing photos in a raster-based system. (Raster stands for `_raster_` — pixel or bitmap — as opposed to vector, which is drawn with lines, and vector, which is drawn with curves or straight lines.) Photoshop is the only one that covers both raster and vector imaging. There are also photo editing programs such as Photoshop Elements, which is a more capable and affordable alternative to Photoshop for novices. It is still an excellent choice for editing both raster and vector images.

computers, laptops or mobile devices. Adobe Photoshop is a cross-platform application that was initially developed for Mac and Windows users. The macOS version works and looks mostly the same as the Windows version, but some macOS-specific features are not available in the Windows version.

The Windows version has a slightly different UI and uses the same application files. A separate macOS app is available, which makes it easier to use. Some of the best features of Photoshop are useful in the basic version of Photoshop Elements. Adobe Photoshop Elements: Photoshop Elements 2020 — A Quick Reference Guide The most recent version of Adobe Photoshop Elements is 2020. It is available to download, as well as buy, from the official Adobe website. The latest edition has a host of new features and is easier to use than previous editions. Photoshop Elements is available for Windows, macOS and Android. You can also access the full Photoshop on mobile devices using the Adobe Creative Cloud app. Table of Contents What Are the Differences Between Adobe Photoshop Elements and Adobe Photoshop? Q: How to dynamically edit the ID of an element which has been duplicated using `add_attributes()`? I am attempting to add a no duplicate field so that when using the `# "add_attributes"` method that is unique to my products so that when the site user is adding multiple products it is saved to the database. Below is my code:

def create @product = current_product if current_product.save flash[:success] = "Product Created" #@product.id = @product.row_id @product.save @product = current_product @product.associations.build(:master_id=>@product.id,:user_id=>current_user.id) respond_with @product else flash[:error] = "Something went wrong" redirect_to products_path end end

 My `add_attributes` method is as follows:

def add_attributes(product) @product = product unless current_product.id == @product.id # product.errors.add("id", "This product already has an id of #{@product.id}") # @product.errors.add("id", "This product already has an id of #{@product.id}") @product.errors.add(:master_id, "This product already has a master_id of #{@product.master_id}") @product.errors.add(:user_id, "This product already has a user_id of #{@product.user_id}") end end

 I have tried using `"product.row_id"` as the ID for the duplicated record but this produces `"undefined method `id' for nil:NilClass"` The Product model has a foreign key constraint for the Master and User that are linked to. Is there another way that I can change the ID of the record in the database? A: You should try to use `@product.row_id.id`. It will create an instance variable (or even change the value of product). Also,
