Photoshop Brushes are among the most used tools in the program. On the left side of the window, you see the tools palette, which has a variety of brushes available. On the right side of the window, you see the brushes being displayed. The colors of a brush represents the size of the brush, with the largest brushes being the closest to the top of the palette. The Gradient tool allows you to make an area of a photo lighter or darker by using various gradient shades. The Healing Brush, which is like the Clone Stamp, allows you to select a section of a photo you want to be perfect, and then paste it in another place. In other words, it is a way to repair a transparent area of the image. The Pen tool allows you to create lines that are extruded in the area around the selected area. Photoshop allows you to make various lines, such as bevel lines, dashed lines, arrows and circles. Select a Tool To select a tool, you can use the toolbox button on the toolbar or the tools pallet on the left side of the screen. This palette is split into four main categories. The first and most powerful is the Brush tools; because you use brushes the most, this is where you will spend most of your time. The second is the Pen tools, which is useful mainly to make precise selections and easy to control lines; this category is also known as the Selection tool. The last tools are the filters that allow you to transform or alter an image and the tools that allow you to create special effects and masks. The tools palette has different tool tabs that allow you to switch quickly between the tools. When working with the Brush tools, you can use tool mode, which is shown in Figure 7.2. Tool mode changes the way the brush behaves; for example, a brush with no angle can be set to be a saw-tooth pattern, which has a different effect than a brush with a 45-degree angle. Each tool has its own toolbar and you can switch to another one by clicking on it. When you want to create a new, edit an existing one or resize it, simply use the toolbox button on the toolbar. Figure 7.2: Pressing B will allow you to change tool mode, depending on the brush you have selected. When you are working with any of the tools, keep in mind that you must hold down the Shift button while you click on the
