Biography Overton was born in 1926 in Alto, Georgia and grew up with the sound of gospel and boogie-woogie piano. He began taking piano lessons as a child, and he had his own piano at the age of 9. Overton also discovered that he could draw. Growing up, Overton loved to draw, and he received a scholarship to attend the Art Institute of Atlanta. He was trained in painting and drawing, and his first job was in a cotton mill. While working there, he picked up his first guitar, a Spanish guitar, from another employee. This he began learning to play. By the time Overton was 25, he had performed on the stages of Minneapolis, St. Paul and Chicago. In 1950 he relocated to Los Angeles. Overton had his own piano bar called "The R&B Lounge" but that ended when he played for an all-black cast in All Night Long, with its theme song, "Mother of the Blues". Overton also wrote the theme song for the television series Hee Haw. Overton was a member of The Hollywood Harmony Association and the International Brotherhood of Rhythm. Overton's career as a songwriter started in the 1950s, writing songs for artists including "Hello, Young Lovers" for Patti Page. Throughout his career, he performed in the field of 6d1f23a050
