In this article, I'm going to share a quick and easy way to record your own Macro instructions for Windows or Mac. You'll be surprised to know that it's much easier than you think. And you'll enjoy the benefits of doing so. So let's get started. First, create a new file, by any name. Just name it Macro.txt, for now. Next, copy and paste the instructions below. Please note that this is a text file. It's not a programming language, it's just a text file with the instructions you want to be executed automatically when pressing a key. This is the contents of Macro.txt file. Next, double-click the Macro.txt file to run the instructions. Press any key to record your macro instructions. Press another key to stop recording your macro instructions. Next, press the key that you just pressed in the Macro.txt file. It will be recorded and executed. Please note that the instructions will be executed automatically. To stop recording, just press the key again. What you did was to create a simple macro. You can record as many as you like, and you can also add as many instructions as you like. When you're done recording, please save it as Macro.txt and launch it by double-clicking. Then press the key you just pressed to start recording. For more information, refer to the following video tutorial. Please note that this is a video tutorial and may not work the same way when reading the text file instructions. Description: Follow us on Facebook at Now what you have learned is to work with the.bashrc script in Linux. The.bashrc script is a text file. You can make any modification you want in it.
